Neuropathic pain is a major clinical problem and the incidence of chronic neuropathic pain is estimated at 300 per 100,000 individuals. Neuropathic pain associated with cancer and diabetes has a negative impact on the quality of life and survival. It is still unknown whether the common Persian spice crocin can be used to treat such pain. In this study, we investigated whether crocin would be effective as a novel therapy for neuropathic pain in the experimental animal model. In our study, treatment of neuropathic pain by oral administration of crocin (10 and 20 mg/kg/day) was examined in the sciatic nerve ligation model of neuropathic pain in the rats. We observed that the dosage of 20 mg/kg was found to be more effective in the treatment of neuropathic pain with a significant reduction of mechanical and thermal hypersensitivity. Biochemical assay of the malondialdehyde (MDA) levels and decrease in the activity of superoxide dismutase (SOD) levels showed that crocin induced an antioxidant effect. It also showed antinociceptive and antioxidant effects in a dose-dependent manner. A significant increase in the levels of several cytokines, including tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-α), interleukin-1β (IL-1β) and interle

Right Opinion Give Us a Permanent Rush on Obamacare October 20, 2013 If people still think that the Obamacare debacle is bad, wait until they see the damage that the Democratic Congress has done to many of the core principles of American federalism. It just took Speaker of the House John Boehner and President Obama to issue a joint statement over the weekend apologizing for shutting down the U.S. government because of Obamacare. In reality, the Congress of the United States passed Obamacare, and it was signed into law by the president because the Democrats didn't want to be seen as re-opening the government. The sound and fury over this matter has distracted attention from the real story, the Democrats' decision to make the government shut down because of Obamacare – an issue that has little to do with the over 800,000 federal employees who face layoffs if the Congress and the president don't agree on a budget resolution. The showdown was set in motion on the first day of the Obama administration, when the president announced his plan to create a new board, the Board of Medicare and Medicaid Services, to which he would appoint people who wanted to impose his vision of a nationwide government-run health care system. The purpose of the board, according to the president, was to get the money flowing to the health-care insurance exchanges as quickly as possible to enable people to buy health insurance. The economy is not well, and creating new jobs is not the way to address it. We need to find ways to grow the private sector. —President Barack Obama, July 2, 2010 Instead of giving the health-care industry more of our hard-earned money, we should be encouraging the private sector to do a better job of providing health insurance. That was a message to the Democrats in the House and the Senate who knew that they had no chance of getting the votes of the hard right Republicans and the Tea Party. The Democrats need the votes of the Blue Dog Democrats and union members – but they knew that was a bridge too far. Instead of actually getting the American people to send them to the U.S. House of Representatives, the Democrats snubbed the whole issue of health care in the fall campaign. You remember: It was too scary for the American people to consider a plan that would spend billions more on health care than the government spends today. Even though they controlled the White House and the Senate, the Democrats lost more than 60 seats
