I have no official "degree in mathematics", I am on a Masters programme, writing my Masters Thesis (doing an undergrad degree before that was impossible for financial reasons) and I am still working on this thesis. I'm a strong student, I do well in the majority of my subjects and even in my undergraduate degree (English). I took a module in Mathematical Studies, which I'm going to take up in my next year of studying. I worked at the library to understand what areas of maths I would like to research. I'm looking to graduate in 3-4 years time at the end of my Masters degree. I am able to do my course work (basic undergraduates subjects, such as analysis, algebra, probability) and some research in that subject. I am also doing a basic introduction to subjects such as set theory and number theory (I will be studying for my A-level from the end of this year). My question is what do I need to study? Is it too narrow? Are there any tools or techniques you would suggest for me to learn before I start university in the fall? Any recommendations on reading material would be appreciated too. A: After your first year of study, you'll have your background and you know what you are good at and not good at. Choose a subject that interests you, perhaps because
