What's new in The Adventures Of Fluffy:

[r] Presented by — “Design is knowing what not to do.” — Charles and Ray Eames When it comes to designing web applications, we’re talking about building a world that the most confident users can explore with freedom. If that sounds harder than it seems, well, actually it’s not at all. You have the power to build something that makes them feel in control. Just like cars, these feelings have to be built and worked on. But at some point you need to deliver, and then you need to iterate. In this session, from our team at Robotpencil, we share our approach to design when talking about and actively working on this abstract concept of confidence. Jorge has the belief that one of the most powerful knowledge resources you can have is a portfolio. He has taught this himself and seen it work for many of the people he’s worked with. He’s not the only one. This fact gets him in trouble a lot. People like him end up put on the trainer or are told that they need more experience to be considered for the position. Even worse, he hears white noise, like nothing bad could ever happen to someone with his background. The truth is, he’s well-founded. The knowledge and experience he leverages when talking about “design” are really just communication skills that anyone can use. Jorge’s been working with educational institutions to help bridge the gap between what people in power want and what they need. When his clients, schools and even the tech world needs answers, he uses his portfolio as a learnable design pattern. In this expert talk, Jorge will be taking you through a series of short, bite-sized talks that will make you a better designer. If you like the Eames, STEM, and coffee, you’re going to like this talk. Presented by Jorge will give a short talk that outlines the psychology behind confidence around design. He’ll explain to you some of the implications and causations for such a large piece of design by using relevant data from studies. He’ll build on the psychology and show you how you can start adding confidence into your own portfolio, be it at work or even at home. Learning objectives: Getting to the point where you can understand and influence the design

The way of life is centered around a fundamental system that is placed within the human body. The core of the entire system is a plant, and then the blood of that plant, combined with a substance that is created from dead flesh. Then there is a snake, though a strange one, but with amazing healing properties, and finally a salve that is produced by the addition of vinegar to blood and those two powerful liquids. This new way of life has been integrated into a community of people. They live an existence of peace that the people hoped that one day they might know. They live in perfect harmony with the land and with their surroundings
