It was the height of the Great Space Race, and the adventurers of the GSSR were amassing fortunes to send to the home planet. I'm trying to fix this using breakpoints: The slow scrolling animation I want to break on the 200 FPS limiter. I've even removed the rotating spaceship bit as I don't think it causes the issue. Here's my setup. A: The scrolling happens 60 times per second at 1920x1080, which is around the minimum framerate needed to run smoothly at that resolution and 60FPS. This means your frame timing is only jumping back to the beginning of the loop over and over. Usually it's better to use "bullet time" - to freeze the image, as by not updating the entire frame, you don't have to suffer the framerate spikes that happen when an entire frame would need to be rendered. There are two ways to do this: Keep a copy of the original image, only update the portion you see - the ship - on each frame. This makes it slower, but it also means you don't have to re-render frames you don't see, and don't have to deal with aliasing and such. Use a RenderTarget2D to render your scene into a custom bitmap for only the portion you see, instead of a raw bitmap. This can be slower, but doesn't suffer from the aliasing issues. O pedido de impeachment de Dilma Rousseff e os ataques do governo aos que discutem a situação do país não deixam de aumentar. O ministro da Casa Civil, Eliseu Padilha, foi entrevistado hoje no programa Roda Viva e comparou os veículos que protestam nas ruas a "bandeira do Nazismo", da Alemanha. Na avaliação dele, "o movimento dessa direita quer deixar claro que não é preciso mais democracia. Isso é a visão de Hitler, não é preciso se calar, sabemos daqui", disse.
